Artist Statement

My artistic practice moves between expansive sculptures, immersive installations, and experimental-documentary films. It is research-based, processual, and material-oriented.

In my sculptural work, my focus lies on the medium of paper, particularly natural fiber. Through my engagement with local fibers such as nettle or artichoke, I explore plants not only as material but also as carriers of ecological, social, and political meanings.

The material research continues in my scenographic work in theater, where I am able to design large-scale, transdisciplinary installations.

My video works are based on a documentary approach that engages with socio-political themes—such as the felt responsibility toward one's birthplace or our relationship with water as a fundamental resource—in an experimental and poetic manner.

As a member of the artist collectives Die Freie Polizeiklasse (2019–2021) and Peace Damage (2019–2021), I took part in artistic-activist actions protesting the newly introduced Polizeiaufgabengesetz in Bavaria. Meanwhile, Peace Damage critically examined the academy as an educational institution, with the aim of establishing a parallel academy within the academy as a distorting mirror.

Hymenoscyphus pseudoalbidus, 2025

Bleached nettle fiber

280 x 50 cm

This work presents an impression of an ash tree trunk made from bleached nettle paper. The fragile, fibrous surface echoes the vulnerability of the ash and references Hymenoscyphus pseudoalbidus, the fungal pathogen responsible for ash dieback. Originating in Asia, the fungus exists there in a balanced symbiosis with ash trees. In Europe, however, this relationship is broken: the ash has no resistance, and coexistence becomes destruction. The piece reflects on ecological imbalance, global movement, and the consequences of disrupted natural systems.

Nettle fiber, Aluminium

90 x 50 cm

EarEar, Munich

The work consists of a seven-part series, each titled with a single word from the poem “All watched over by Machines of Loving Grace.” Taken together, they form the complete sentence.

The poem is by Richard Brautigan from 1967. It is set in a forest and envisions a harmonious coexistence of nature, humans, and machines. Written in 1960s California, the text is shaped by technological optimism and early cybernetic utopias, in which control is understood as a form of protection and care.

Against this backdrop, the work reflects on the ambivalent relationship between nature and technology—between protection and surveillance, care and order.

So schwer wie leicht, 2025

As heavy as light

Installation

nettle fibers

500 x 200 cm

The work So schwer wie leicht (as heavy as light) addresses architecture and memory in relation to the reconstruction of Munich after 1945. What is visible is the imprint of a two-meter-high wooden fence in nettle paper.

In 1948, a fence was erected around the foundations of the so-called Ehrentempel (Temples of Honor), which was dismantled again in 1955. The temples served as a cult and burial site for those who lost their lives supporting the Hitler Putsch in 1923. After the demolition of the superstructures, no suitable new development for the temple ruins was found. Thus, the city decided to build a wooden fence around the foundations. This was removed in 1955 and the area was planted. Today, the foundations are protected both as natural heritage and as historical monuments.

Nettles grow almost everywhere, especially on ruins, cemeteries, or along fences. During the First and Second World Wars, they were increasingly collected and cultivated to become independent from cotton imports. They serve as medicinal herbs and, due to their high nutrient content, were used as food substitutes during times of hunger. Among other things, soldiers' uniforms were made from nettle fibers.

Das ewige Leben ist auch nur endlich, 2025
Eternal life is only finite

Four channel audio installation, 10 min 21sec

Nettle fibres, steel

11.5 x 7 x 3 m

Sound composition: Marija Margolina and Nikolaus von Bemberg

Nettle - often misjudged as a stinging and itchy weed - is a plant of exceptional resilience and versatility. Although its fibres have been used for centuries, it has only recently experienced a renaissance in the search for sustainable materials. Its fibres are not only biodegradable, they are also among the strongest in the world. Without artificial irrigation and fertilisers, stinging nettles thrive almost everywhere. It therefore symbolises a sustainable alternative to conventional raw materials and is not only used in the textile industry, but also in the packaging and automotive industries, e.g. as interior panelling for vehicles.

However, stinging nettles are not only a material resource, they are also linked to cultural and ritual practices. As it requires a high nitrogen content in the soil, its distribution is closely linked to human activity and settlement - for example in rubble dumps, cemeteries or along fences. Its resulting connection to 'transitional places' made it appear as a bridge between this world and the hereafter. It is considered a protective plant, a magical amulet against evil and was also used as such. the spirit of New Materialism, I ask: What do we regard as living and what as dead? How do we encounter seemingly inanimate matter?

In my artistic research, I have been working with nettle fibres for three years - not as a 'dead' material, but as a partner in dialogue. For the sculpture, I transformed 17 kilograms of nettle fibres across various material states. To a certain extent, the stinging nettle eludes moulding - it remains independent, unruly, alive. In the sculpture, this interplay of form and dissolution, of solidity and transience can be sensually experienced.

The multi-channel sound installation allows the nettle itself to have its say. The pianist Nikolaus von Bemberg played the nettle sculpture and composed the audible frequencies together with the sound artist Marija Margolina. The sound can be seen as an acoustic testimony of our encounter in which the plant expands beyond its physical nature.

Tra isola e continente, 2024

Between island and continent

Installation, HD, 44min 51sec

Discarded advertising panels, wooden support structure

Tra isola e continente deconstructs the romanticized idea of Sicily by following the everyday lives of two Sicilians from different social classes and nationalities. It addresses the impact of numerous invasions on the island, the inadequate infrastructure, the attempt to exploit resources economically and the consequences of persistent corruption. It asks about the possibility of change through self-organization, what belonging means and whether there is a responsibility towards one's birthplace.

The shooting of the film started in November 2023 and was finished during the Residency in 2024 in Favara/Farm Cultural Park, Sicily.

Hybris III, 2024

Nettle fibres, paste

376 × 200cm

The series Hybris I-III engages with geometric forms. Geometry has fundamentally shaped our thinking, building, and coexistence. Its forms are deeply rooted in nature (cell structures, plant forms, etc.) and serve us humans as a means of orientation and knowledge.

Through scientific abstraction, geometry also became an instrument of division and control: a system of idealized forms that claims precision and universal validity. The organic nature of nettle fiber resists such fixed prescriptions. It follows its own logic—irregular, mutable, and responsive. The fibers are brought into a tension with geometric structures. The human need for order encounters the willfulness of the material.

The work questions anthropocentric notions that conceive of nature as malleable raw material. It emphasizes the interplay of human and non-human actors. Here, geometry is not projected onto the fiber but enters into dialogue with it.

Hybris II, 2024

Nettlefiber, paste

146 × 78cm

By experimenting with nettle fibre, I explore geometric forms both on the surface and in space. These are forms that can be precisely calculated through human theory, yet the rules that shape them were not invented by humans — only discovered. When the paper is folded, it transforms into a three-dimensional object: two interpenetrating cubes.

300 × 64 × 64 cm (part 1)

400 × 105 cm (part 2)

Patenting ideas is intended to ensure the competitiveness of companies and at the same time spur people on to come up with new inventions that will benefit society. However, the balance between the economic profit of individuals and the general benefit is often unbalanced.

The impact of patents on human rights such as the right to medical care, access to clean water, the right to food, etc. as well as the targeted exclusion of economically disadvantaged nations and individuals through monopolisation make patents controversial practices.

The three-metre-high tower, secured with tension belts, consists of paper bricks pressed from 648 destroyed files from the European Patent Office. Formally, the tower is based on the structure of the well-known 'Jenga' game. Placed on a Euro pallet, the material used refers to industrial transport and the production of goods. On the wall next to it are 648 names of granted patents - as many as were used in the tower.

As part of the work, a public discussion on 'What is a patent?' took place on 24 July 2023 between a patent attorney and a sociology and philosophy student at LMU.

The accompanying text takes a critical look at the question 'What is a patent?' from a sociological and philosophical perspective.

Racketeering, 2024
Artichoke fibres, wax
8 x 5 x 7 cm

The term racket in critical theory was coined by Max Horkheimer in the 1940s and describes the basic form of political rule, which is ultimately based on violence. The word racket comes from the US colloquial language and originally referred to groups that extort protection money; the racketeer is the blackmailer, the racketeering is the extortion.

The artichoke wars are the name given to a conflict between mafia clans and artichoke growers and dealers in the USA in the 1930s. The Mafia used violence and intimidation to gain a monopoly on the domestic wholesale of artichokes, which they bought up cheaply in the Californian growing regions in order to sell them on the East Coast at an inflated price.

Hidromecânica, 2023

Video, 1920 x 1080 px, with sound, 3min 52sec
Paradela, Portugal

The construction of dams and the use of water as a resource represent a profound intervention in sensitive biospheres, with potential for lasting environmental damage and negative impacts on social fabric. „Hidromecânica“ offers a portrayal of the structures of such dams—a monumental human intervention that disrupts ecosystems and social frameworks. Filmed at an approximately 3.8 square kilometer reservoir in Paradela (Montalegre, Portugal), the footage shows the effects of this infrastructure, which is used by Energias de Portugal (EDP) for electricity generation. EDP is a Lisbon-based energy corporation that was privatized in 2011—energy plays a central role in our social dynamics, so who owns such an important company is also crucial for society.

Der Riss ist der Ort, wo Licht eintritt, 2023
the crack is the place where light enters nettle fiber, steel

Each 75 x 140 x 60 cm

The work consists of three objects based on modular table forms that elude their usual use due to the nettle fibre material. We are ambivalent about stinging nettles. Labelled as a weed and unpleasantly itchy, it turns out to be both a useful and versatile raw material. The stinging nettle cannot be moulded into any shape. It shrinks, tears and escapes.

The three modules, which can be arranged in different ways, develop a life of their own as art objects, distancing them from the utilitarian object.

Discourse Dinner, 2022

Performative meal with lecture

Co-operation with Grupi ATA, Martin Huber and Jonas Kolecki

Grupi ATA is a self-organised, activist art collective from Kamza, Albania, consisting of artists and lawyers.

Two members of the collective Grupi ATA will give a lecture as an introduction to the communal dinner. This was prepared by the three artists together with the members of the collective, which allowed for an intensive exchange during the cooking. During the meal, autonomous conversations developed around the initial input of the two lecturers and expanded through the exchange with the two group members who were on site.

The aim is to use the medium of food to dissolve hierarchies and enable everyone to exchange ideas on an equal footing. For example, the shape of the table is designed so that everyone sits at the same height. Eating as a social and universal activity contributes to a feeling of connectedness and makes it easier to approach one another.

> Discourse Dinner, Kunsthaus Dahlem, Berlin

In their stigmatised community on the outskirts of Tirana, there is no cinema, library, radio station or newspaper. Their aim is to draw attention to this through actions in public space and thus establish it. They do this with the help of Augusto Boal's theatre pedagogical method, among other things. Among other things, they scrutinise the patriarchal Albanian customary law called Kanun, but also try to identify and reinterpret certain aspects of it that could reveal its contemporary relevance in relation to issues of public space, the commons and the development of communal and democratic decision-making processes.

Grupi ATA moves between art, anthropology and jurisprudence. The group's lawyers offer their help to people who cannot afford legal support.

Ein Tisch ist ein Tisch ist ein Tisch ist ein Tisch, 2022

Paper

140 x 67 x 77 cm

A paper table faithfully replaces one of the tables in the Kunsthaus Dahlem café. The original café table has been moved to the museum's exhibition space. As an art object, the paper table will be exposed to the everyday use of the café, which, due to the choice of material, will result in its texture changing over time. Traces of use are inscribed on it. The café becomes a studio, the visitors become contributors to the work. The work questions the functionality and use of an object in relation to its context: the art object becomes a utility object, the utility object, the original table, is moved into the exhibition space, where it becomes an art object.

Happening on three dates

Theodor-Heuss-Platz, Munich

In collaboration with cultural and district actors (Raumfragen Neuperlach, Stadtsanierung Neuperlach, Kulturbunt Neuperlach, SHAERE, ZAK, Kinder- und Jugendtreff Zeitfrei, Community Kitchen, Nachbarschaftstreff Neuperlach, Kirchliches Jugendzentrum and ASZ Perlach), I invite people who would like to cook their favourite dish for a group of around 30 people in a public space - for people who will be acquaintances or even people who happen to be passing by.

The cooking will take place on three dates in the last two weeks of July, each time with different groups. These are people of all ages and from diverse social and cultural backgrounds. Each group has one person responsible for cooking the respective dish. My role is that of a 'facilitator' who sets the framework and organises everything necessary.

Zwischenmenschlicher Rampenbau, 2022

Audioinstallation (piles of wood, Makita boxes, tools, wooden pallets, painter's tape),

3 min 14 sec

Collaboration with the collective Workers

Voice: Lisa Stiegler

In my audio installation, I refer to the interpersonal construction of ramps. The emotional relationship work that is done alongside the daily labour. A pile of wood that has been heaped up to build a ramp to the adjacent room forms a seat in the centre. A voice can be heard from under the boards, talking about emotional ramp work. Around the pile of wood, a wooden pallet and several toolboxes with material bear witness to physical labour.

The Workers collective focuses on making invisible labour visible. By dressing up in blue lab coats and animal masks, they alienate everyday actions and working methods. In doing so, they show previously invisible activities - from setting up an exhibition to documenting existing work and recording interviews.

Tischung Transformativer Gruppenprozesse, 2022

shredded paper from the collective „Peace Damage“

200 x 90 x 75 cm

The sculpture Tischung Transformativer Gruppenprozesse is a symbolic and material transformation of all the documents that I have collected in two and a half years of work with my co-founded collective Peace Damage.

For me, the symbolic power of this work takes place on several levels:

The Peace Damage collective took a critical look at the structures of the Academy of Fine Arts Munich as an institution and how they could be changed in favour of the education of its students and the interaction of all the academy's staff.

Peace Damage observed a fundamental avoidance of conflict in their personal environment, but also, for example, in the Academy's committees, which in our opinion leads to stagnation and possibly even greater conflict. Our approach was therefore not to avoid conflict, but to deal with differences of opinion consciously and constructively. We endeavoured to achieve this through an in-depth examination of the method of non-violent communication and mediation.

In three steps - analysing the status quo, empowerment and change - we wanted to found a parallel institution, Academy of Fine, as a counter-image and distortion within the existing building structures of the Academy of Fine Arts Munich in the form of a kitchen.

Phase three could not be realised due to the separation of the collective in summer 2021. The separation was very painful for me because it also jeopardised my desire for a possible constructive-productive collaboration within the collective.

The construction of a table from the shredded materials that accumulated during my work with the Peace Damage collective represents for me an appreciation and at the same time a transformation of the work I have done.

The form of the table as a social object, which played a central role in our work, embodies for me the possibility of coming together in a different way. But also the possibility of bringing things to the table and moving forward with them.

Eukalyptia, 2021

Experimental short film, 6 min, HD, colour

In collaboration with Anina Stolz

Camera: Patrik Thomas

Penamacor, Portugal

2021, we have already passed the tipping point: that everything could change. We can no longer prevent it, only the extent and speed are still in our hands.

Eukalyptia is set in the garden of an old manor house on the outskirts of Penamacor, a village in the north of Portugal. Between heat-scorched grass and crumbling masonry, three people conjure up the basic elements of nature: fire, water and earth. Eucalyptus seeds are burnt - the plant has the rare property of releasing its seeds on contact with fire, throwing them far out and thus multiplying, even if it dies in the process. What is a natural blessing for the tree is a man-made disaster for the land. In Portugal, a large part of the land area consists of eucalyptus trees, which destroy the soil in their monoculture and regularly lead to large-scale forest fires with devastating consequences due to their easy flammability.

With Eukalyptia, we ask what happens when the elements, which are the basic building blocks of our lives, get out of control - fire can no longer be tamed, the earth becomes infertile and the rain uncontrollable.

The short film was made in 2021 during the 'Movimento' film lab in Portugal, where around 30 people from all over the world come together for a fortnight every year to make films together.

Performance for the annual exhibition,
Garden of the Academy of Fine Arts, Munich

I take visitors on a self-built rickshaw through the exhibition in the Akademiegarten and explain the production process of artworks. How much time and money goes into a work? What difficulties have to be overcome to achieve the product that the viewer can then enjoy? I examine the artwork in terms of these conditions, focussing on the work behind each artwork. What does it take to realise an idea and what place and recognition does it have in our society?

Using questions that I ask the visitors in relation to the respective works, I want to draw attention to the production conditions that are invisible to the viewer but very real for the artists.

Piazza Connection explores the piazza, its symbolic dimension, its past and its future. Dialogues, problems, solutions.

Based on conversations with residents and visitors of three characteristic squares - 'piazze' - in Palermo (Piazza Magione, Piazzetta Bagnasco and Largo Alfano in Borgo Vecchio), the artists have collected the voices and faces of the people. Their view of the spaces and the people focuses on personal and collective stories, overlapping needs and dreams.

The piazza as a meeting place, as a place for socialising, as a public, lively and collective space. A space for exchange between people, a social, cultural and political space - a central, synergetic element of democracy.

Peace Damage, 2019-2021
Collective
Academy of Fine Arts, Munich

Peace Damage was a transdisciplinary collective at the interface of visual arts, theatre, architecture and science with members from the fields of philosophy, psychology and law. Founded in 2019 by the stage designers Mariella Maier, Ruth Hahn and the sculptor Anneke Marie Huhn. As a student representation of the AdBK Munich, the practice of institutional critique already played an important role in the artists' work.

Peace Damage was based on the conviction that conflicts must be analysed, articulated and resolved in a collaborative process in order to create sustainable change. This is because conflicts call into question seemingly smooth, long-established and therefore taken-for-granted forms of work and organisation, thereby uncovering productive potential.

With this in mind, we deliberately sought out conflict and its inherent power of change.

The specific starting point and location for Peace Damage was the AdBK Munich.

Headquarter: Neubaucafeteria, Academy of Fine Arts, Munich

In an examination of our own educational and training centre, we engaged in institutional critique and questioned the material and ideal conditions for studying and working at the academy: Under what conditions do studying and teaching take place at the academy? Which forms of participation are included in studying at the academy? Which does it exclude? How does communication 'work' at the academy and in what ways does it work? What can studying at an art academy train students to do? What political agency does an artistic practice enable? What exchange can art and society enter into?

Conzept: Mariella Maier

Hochschule für Film und Fernsehen, Munich

A self-built, artistic, non-violent and communicative space made of recycled wood is spontaneously created on the open field in front of the Munich University of Television and Film. In one of Munich's most expensive and speculative locations, abstract structures become possible, places where people work, live and discuss. Tools, materials, but also people with experience in tinkering, screwing and connecting are on site. Temporary people are invited to realise their ideas and linger. The wormhole is a place of being different. It is a place where negative energy is condensed and the limits of the imaginable are exceeded by bending the space. A space for concrete possibilities.

The Freie Polizeiklasse is an interdisciplinary, cross-class and cross-societal collectivist academic experimental project in the socio-plastic visual arts. One thematic focus is the critical examination of real political issues and their consequences for art and culture. An experimental laboratory for individual autonomy in collective action.

What does it do to you when you walk very slowly with others who all want to talk about the same subject and yet are not allowed to talk about it?

Silence is taken to the extreme, to the point of embodiment. Everyday communication can no longer take place. The free thought process takes place in silence, with the slowest possible steps (9 beats per minute) - together from the State Chancellery to the Maximilian Bridge near the Bavarian State Parliament - and deals with the new Police Duties Act and its consequences for the population.
